Those bilateral development partners, from whom it has been decided not to receive development assistance at Government level, have been advised to consider providing their development assistance to non-government organizations and Universities, etc. in India. It has further been suggested that they may also consider routing their development assistance through multilateral development agencies.

A brief write-up on the assistance extended by different countries and organisations is given in the following paragraphs:-

An amount of Rs.26.49 crore has been disbursed under the Swiss mixed credit upto 31.12.2006. Switzerland also provides assistance towards NGO projects.

IX. UNITED KINGDOM (UK)

The United Kingdom has been providing Bilateral Development Assistance to India since 1958 through the Department for International Development (DFID). The UK is currently India's largest bilateral development cooperation partner in terms of grants.

The UK assistance is available in the form of Financial Assistance (routed through budget) and Technical Cooperation (TC), which includes consultancy services, deployment of experts, training etc.

Development Cooperation Assistance of UK flows to mutually agreed projects in social sectors such as Education, Slum Improvement, Health & Family Welfare and Rural livelihood within the overarching framework of poverty alleviation.

Around 45% of DFID assistance is provided for Centrally Sponsored Schemes (CSS), such as Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan and National AIDS Control Programme (NACP), RCH, etc. The priority States of the UK assistance are Andhra Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Orissa and West Bengal. DFID also contributes to Civil Society projects through Poorest Areas Civil Society (PACS).

In March, 2004, DFID launched its new Country Plan for India for 2004-2008, titled "India Country Plan-Partnership for Development", which envisages up-scaling of DFID assistance to India to 300 million Pounds per annum by 2007-08.
